Affective Norms for English Words (ANEW) 1999

Introduction

The Affective Norms for English Words (ANEW) is being developed to provide a set of normative emotional ratings for a large number of words in the English language. The goal is to develop a set of verbal materials that have been rated in terms of pleasure, arousal, and dominance to complement the existing International Affective Picture System (IAPS, Lang, Bradley, & Cuthbert, 1999) and International Affective Digitized Sounds (IADS; Bradley & Lang, 1999), which are collections of picture and sound stimuli, respectively, that also include these affective ratings. The ANEW, IAPS, and IADS are being developed and distributed by NIMH Center for Emotion and Attention (CSEA) investigators Margaret Bradley and Peter Lang, in order to provide standardized materials that are available to researchers in the study of emotion and attention. The existence of these affective collections should help in comparing results across different investigations of emotion, as well as in allowing replication within and across research labs assessing basic or applied problems in the study of emotion.

In an undertaking of this nature, choices have to be made regarding the affective judgments used to standardize materials. Here, we began by using a relatively simple dimensional view, which assumes that emotion can be defined as a coincidence of values on a number of different strategic dimensions. This view is founded in Osgood's (Osgood, Suci, & Tanenbaum, 1957) seminal work with the semantic differential in which factor analyses conducted on a wide variety of verbal judgements indicated that the variance in emotional assessments was accounted for by three major dimensions: The two primary dimensions were one of affective valence (ranging from pleasant to unpleasant) and one of arousal (ranging from calm to excited). A third, less strongly-related dimension was variously called 'dominance' or 'control'. Dimensional views of emotion have been advocated by a large number of theorists through the years, including Wundt (1896), Mehrabian and Russell (1974), and Tellegen (1985).

To assess the three dimensions of pleasure, arousal, and dominance, the Self-Assessment Manikin (SAM), an affective rating system originally devised by Lang (1980) was used. Bradley and Lang (1990) determined that the SAM correlates well with factors of pleasure and arousal obtained using the longer, verbal Semantic Differential Scale (Mehrabian and Russell, 1974). The graphic SAM figures comprise bipolar scales that depict different values along each emotional dimension. Figure 1 illustrates a relatively recent, scannable version of SAM, which was used to acquire the ratings in the ANEW. For the pleasure dimension, SAM ranges from a smiling, happy figure to a frowning, unhappy figure; to represent the arousal dimension, SAM ranges from an excited, wide-eyed figure to a relaxed, sleepy figure. For the dominance dimension, SAM ranges from a large figure (in control) to a small figure (dominated). In this version of SAM, the subject can bubble in the location corresponding to any of the 5 figures on each scale, or between any two figures, which results in a 9-point rating scale for each dimension. In addition to the ScanSAM version of SAM, there is a booklet paper-and-pencil version, as well as a dynamic computer version written for IBM-compatible written and distributed by Ed Cook<sup>1</sup> at the University of Alabama-Birmingham (e.g., Cook, Atkinson, & Lang, 1987). The computer SAM scale uses a 20-point scale, rendering more points along each dimension than the ScanSAM or paper-and-pencil versions.

Using SAM, subjects have rated the words currently in the ANEW on the dimensions of pleasure, arousal, and dominance. Figure 2 illustrates the shape of the affective space that results when each word is plotted 2-dimensional space defined by its mean pleasure and arousal rating. There are several characteristic features of the resulting space. First, these stimulus materials evoke reactions across the entire range of each dimension: mean pleasure ratings for these words range from very unpleasant to very pleasant, and are distributed fairly evenly across the space. Secondly, a wide range of arousal levels are elicited by these materials. For items rated as neutral in valence (i.e., those occurring at and near the midline of the valence dimension), arousal ratings do not attain the high levels associated with either pleasant or unpleasant materials. The distribution of the ANEW words in affective space is quite similar to that obtained with IAPS and IADS stimuli, suggesting that this space is representative of the affective distribution of materials from a number of different modalities.

Normative rating procedure for the ANEW

This overview of the rating procedure is an example of how each rating study was conducted. In general, each experiment presented 100-150 different words. Each set of words was prepared on a 8 1/2 x 11 sheet of paper that presented individual words in 4 columns and 14 rows (i.e. 56 words per sheet, see Figure 2). The words were sequentially numbered in rows from 1 to n. For each set of words, two forms were prepared which counterbalanced the order in which any specific word was rated, and the items surrounding any specific word.

SAM ratings of pleasure, arousal, and dominance were collected in a self-paced procedure, in which the subject silently read each word, and then bubbled in their emotional ratings on the ScanSam sheet.

Subjects. Introductory Psychology class students, balanced for gender, participated as part of a course requirement.

Design. Subjects were run in groups ranging in size from 8 to 25, with the male:female ratio no more than 1:2 (or 2:1) for any single group session. The ScanSAM version of the SAM instrument was used (see Figure 1). In this format, the (unlabeled) dimensions of pleasure, arousal and dominance are graphically rendered, with each of the 3 dimensions ordinal scaled with 5 figures. The subject can bubble in 1 of 9 circles on the ScanSam sheet, with bubbles between graphic figures indicating a level intermediate between the 2 graphically depicted levels for each dimension.

Materials and Equipment Among the words currently included in the ANEW are approximately 150 words used in Mehrabian & Russell (1974) and 450 words used in Bellezza, Greenwald, & Banaji, (1986).

Procedure. Subjects received the sheets containing the words to-be-rated, and a packet of ScanSam rating sheets. Instructions regarding ScanSam were given (see below), and each subject worked at his or her own pace rating the words in the word booklet. The session was completed for all subjects within 1 hour.

Instructions (ScanSam version)

Thanks for coming; I appreciate your participation in this study. The study being conducted today is investigating emotion, and concerns how people respond to different types of words. You will notice that you have a blue packet with these figures on them (Hold up ScanSam sheet). We call this set of figures SAM, and you will be using these figures to rate how you felt while reading each word. SAM shows three different kinds of feelings: Happy vs. Unhappy (point left), Excited vs. Calm (point middle), and Controlled vs. In-control (point right). You will use make all 3 ratings for each word that you read

Please notice that each of the three feelings are arrayed along a different scale. The left panel shows the happy-unhappy scale, which ranges from a smile to a frown. At one extreme of this scale, you are happy, pleased, satisfied, contented, hopeful. When you feel completely happy you should indicate this by bubbling in the figure at the left. The other end of the scale is when you feel completely unhappy, annoyed, unsatisfied, melancholic, despaired, or bored. You can indicate feeling completely unhappy by bubbling in the figure at the right. The figures also allow you to describe intermediate feelings of pleasure, by bubbling in any of the other pictures. If you feel completely neutral, neither happy nor sad, bubble in the figure in the middle (point to middle SAM figure). If your feeling of pleasure or displeasure falls between two of the pictures, then bubble in the space between the figures. This permits you to make more finely graded ratings of how you feel in reaction to each word. There are a total of 9 possible points along each rating scale that you can bubble in to indicate the extent to which you felt happy or unhappy. Any questions so far?

The excited or calm scale is the second type of feeling displayed here, and it is the middle scale in the row. At one extreme of this scale you are stimulated, excited, frenzied, jittery, wide-awake, or aroused. When you feel completely aroused, bubble in the figure at the left of the row. Now look at the other end of the excited-calm scale, which is the completely opposite feeling. Here you would feel completely relaxed, calm, sluggish, dull, sleepy, or unaroused. Indicate feeling calm by bubbling in the figure at the right of the row. As with the happy-unhappy scale, you can represent intermediate levels of excitedness or calmness by bubbling in any of the other figures. If you are not excited nor at all calm, bubble in the figure in the middle of the row. Again, if you wish to make a more finely tuned rating of how excited or calm you feel, bubble in the space between the pictures.

The last scale of feeling which you will rate is whether you felt controlled or in control. This scale is on the right side of the row. At one end of the scale (point left) you have feelings characterized as completely controlled, influenced, cared-for, awed, submissive, or guided. Please indicate feeling controlled by bubbling in the figure at the left. At the opposite end of this scale, you would bubble in the rightmost figure if you feel completely in control, influential, important, dominant, autonomous, or controlling. You can indicate feeling dominant by bubbling in the figure at the right of the row. Note that when the figure is large, you feel in control, and that it will be very small when you feel controlled. If you feel neither in control nor controlled you should bubble in the middle picture. Again, you can bubble in any of the intermediate figures, or between them.

When you have made all 3 ratings for each word, you will have one bubble in each section, to make 3 bubbles in the row. Any questions?

Please work at a rapid place and don't spend too much time thinking about each word. Rather, make your ratings based on your first and immediate reaction as you read each word. When you are finished please sit quietly and wait until the rest of the group has finished.

Figures and Tables

Table 1. Means and standard deviations for pleasure, arousal, and dominance ratings for each word currently rated in the ANEW, averaged across all subjects. The final column lists the word frequency, taken from Kucera and Francis (1967) norms, and is the number of times the word appeared in the data base that Kucera and Francis used. A higher number indicates a more frequent word.

Table 2. Means and standard deviations for pleasure, arousal, and dominance ratings for each word currently rated in the ANEW, for male subjects. The final column lists word frequency, from Kucera and Francis (1967).
